

General Sites

These sites are massive databases of jobs in every industry all over the country (and the world). You can refine your searches a number of ways, such as location, industry, or position. You will likely find that many of the jobs that interest you appear on multiple sites.

Niche Job Sites

Niche job sites list jobs for certain industries, like advertising or fashion. A niche site will help you focus your online job search. While nothing can replace networking, you probably have a better shot at jobs listed on a niche site than jobs you find through general sites, like Indeed.com.

This resource includes a small sampling of niche sites for popular industries. You can find more niche sites by searching for your industry and niche job site.

Ways to check that a niche site is legit:

- You aren't charged a fee to use the site.
- It doesn't simply mine content from a larger career site, like Craigslist. (You can tell if the job ad links connect you to the larger site.)
- The most recent job was posted within the last week.
- The job postings are frequent.
- The site doesn't look super spammy.
- Someone in your professional network recommended it to you.
